

SoundOut

Promoting student voice in schools

ABOUT SOUNDOUT

SoundOut is a national nonprofit program that works with elementary, middle, and high school students, teachers, and administrators to promote student voice in schools. We offer programs, training, consultation, assessments, curriculum development, and strategic planning for schools, education agencies, and community organizations.

PROGRAMS

Online Tools

Extensive libraries of examples, activities, curricula, and research supporting student voice, meaningful student involvement, students on school boards, and other areas.

Student Forums

Student facilitators and partner-teachers introduce the entire school to meaningful student involvement and explore concerns and design roles for students in school change.

School Improvement Planning

Elementary, middle, and senior high schools integrate student voice in NCLB school improvement plans. Relevance, rigor, relationships, and reflection help students analyze, create, develop and evaluate learning.

Action Institutes

The goal of this program is to "pull back the curtain" and showing students how they learn, what they learn, and how they can learn what they want to. After learning about learning, students learn about education reform, decision-making, and ways they can affect the school system.

Training

We focus on all the topics you don't learn in school or teacher's college, but need to know: Student Voice 101, Student/Adult Partnerships, Making Leadership Matter, and more. Each of our trainings are customized to the needs, interests, and abilities of participants.
